Project Summary

Our project, Remix a Canvas, is an art piece and informal experiment about creativity. We present users with a blank canvas as well as the option to remix the previous drawing somebody has made on our site. We want to see how many people choose to create an original work and how many remix somebody else's.

Once a user submits their drawing (original or remix), they will be presented with not just one, but many of the previous users' drawings in reverse chronological order. Now, they can see the evolution of the drawings people submit as original works were remixed, and those were remixed, and those were remixed, etc. – as well as when people created something entirely new and original. We want to make users consider how the existence of previous works limits what they think is possible – even when given a literal blank canvas to work with.

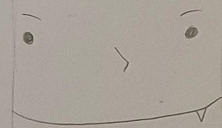

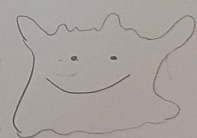

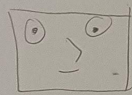

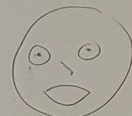

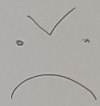

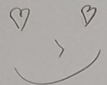

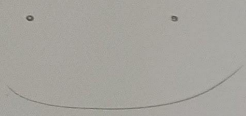

Pop Up On Submit:

A hand-drawn sketch of a pop-up form. The form is enclosed in a rectangular border with a shaded, textured background. Inside the form, there are three input fields stacked vertically. The first field is labeled "Title of work", the second is labeled "Author of piece", and the third is a button labeled "Submit". In the top right corner of the form, there is a small square button containing an "X", likely for closing the pop-up.
